An interesting circumstance was written by a certain 'DP' to Doctor Vincent Martin detailing the hardships 'he' bore in connection with headaches seemingly due to sinusitis. The patient has consulted with assorted specialists but still the condition persists.

- Flush your nose out through one teaspoon of table salt, two cups of warm water and a pinch of baking soda.
- Place this mixture in a small cup next tilt your head.
- Gently pinch one nostril closed and sniff with the open nose, after that blow your nose.
- Repeat on the other nose.

However, I have to agree with Doctor Martin that the sinus infection per se is not the real cause for these kinds of headaches. There may be instances when it will be the result in but oftentimes they only serve as trigger for the headaches that will be caused by other disorders. Fact is, these headaches that are attributed to sinus infections may be migraine or other forms of vascular or "tension" headaches that also offer pain within the forehead and around the eyes.
